A member of the Neutral Nations Inspection Team is convinced that reinforcements of men and materiel are coming in from Manchuria but he says he cannot prove it. He believes, on the basis of personal observation, that on one day 25 trains entered Korea while only two were officially reported. He has noted many small units of squad to platoon size which leads him to believe the Chinese are infiltrating troops across the border. The troops, he says, give no appearance of a beaten army. The North Koreans have nothing to say and all decisions are made by the Chinese.
